International Shares.

It may come as a surprise to many Australian investors that the domestic stock market only accounts for approximately 2% of global market capitalisation.

As an investor if you are fully invested in the Australian share market it means you are concentrating your risk, limiting your potential returns and missing out on 98% of other investment opportunities.

Whilst there are obvious benefits for investing domestically the arguments in favour of global diversification and exposure to other industries and sectors not available within Australia are compelling.

Bell Potter's international equities service enables you to directly invest in equity markets in the United States, Japan, throughout Europe and the United Kingdom, as well as other major exchanges around the globe.
